University, who laid the traditions of domestic medicine and formed the moral standard of the medical profession by personal example.

Their military and civil feat lies in the fact that during the Great Patriotic War, each of them spared no effort to treat the wounded to ensure their rapid recovery and return to the front. The doctors of the hospitals themselves provided transportation of the wounded during the relocation of hospitals, which was especially difficult when the Red Army units retreated. During the days of fierce battles of the Red Army units, military doctors prepared hospitals for mass admission of the wounded, trained young surgeons and surgical nurses, created new methods of treatment in military field surgery. They risked their lives all through the war. After large-scale combat battles, surgeons had to operate 22 hours a day; operate under shelling; and in the first years of the war, when there was a shortage of blood, they themselves donated blood for the wounded; provide evacuation of the wounded from the environment, at night and under enemy shelling. At our university, a generation of front-line doctors worked until the end of the 80s. It was a very unusual generation of front-line teachers. They taught strict discipline, self-demanding, courage and patriotism even in peacetime!
